Re: articulate Format for Evidence in Motion Courses

As an alternative to the traditional course in which participants spend several days on site, we are able to offer courses via a combination of online and on site learning. We can deliver didactic material (ie, lectures) online via a software called Articulate, which combines voice streaming over Power Point slides. We can deliver recorded presentations and key articles to registered participants 4 weeks in advance of the course via your MyEIM profile, giving participants plenty of time to familiarize themselves with the didactic material prior to the on site component. Since much of the lecture material has been reviewed in advance, the on site component is 1 day rather than 2. The large majority of the on site component is spent in lab learning psychomotor skills and specific decision-making strategies.

There are many advantages to this model of learning. Participants have several weeks to review the material in advance of the course, which facilitates retention and offers the opportunity to develop informed questions prior to the on site component. Participants can also continue to access the recorded presentations and key articles online via their MyEIM profile for 2 months following the course as many times as they wish. This is far more valuable than a printed handout that cannot speak to you! From a practical standpoint, participants also receive CEUs for a 2-day course but only have to give up 1 day of their weekend to do so! The recorded presentations and key articles are typically not available to those participating in the 2-day on site format.

Let us know if you have any questions. We may be reached by phone at (888) 709-7096 or by email at courses@evidenceinmotion.com. We are excited about the opportunities to deliver new and effective ways of learning that leverage the best technologies on the market. We look forward to partnering with you to translate evidence into practice. Thanks!
